Dear Governor Cuomo and Acting Commissioner Gerstman:

New Yorkers have some of the cleanest water in the nation because of stalwart efforts by the Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) to enforce water quality standards. Any landowner who has applied for a water-related permit knows how stringent those rules can be. The question now is whether those same rules apply to out-of-state oil and gas companies.

Williams and Cabot are multi-billion dollar companies based in Oklahoma and Texas that want to build a huge pipeline through the forested hills of central New York and the northern Catskills. Ironically named the "Constitution Pipeline," this corporate partnership has been granted the right of eminent domain to take private property for the purpose of carrying fracked shale gas from Pennsylvania through New York and out of the country. Employees and officers of both corporations have stated to their investors that they want to sell gas at the highest possible price on the international market.

To do that, Williams and Cabot have chosen the most destructive route and the cheapest construction methods. Described as a "greenfield project," the Constitution Pipeline would convert pristine fields and forests into an industrial corridor. Construction would involve clear-cutting, blasting, and digging a 124-mile-long, 125-foot-wide gash up and down hills, through cold-water trout streams, and across scores of farms and rural communities. Instead of carefully boring under fragile wetlands and streams as requested by DEC, Williams and Cabot would maximize impacts by trenching through them, burying their pipeline just below the surface where it would be extremely vulnerable to scouring, exposure, and rupture. Critical aquatic habitat, which has never been surveyed for species of concern, would be harmed. The project would also fragment forests and wipe out more than 700,000 trees in a region known for devastating floods. Clear-cutting on steep slopes would cause massive erosion and contaminate streams and watersheds, especially during the extreme storms that have become frequent in recent years.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has given conditional approval to this project, but fortunately New York State has the power to stop it. Under section 401 of the federal Clean Water Act, the pipeline cannot be built unless DEC certifies that the state's strict water quality standards will not be violated. The problem is that there is no way to tear through the sensitive hills, forests, wetlands, and streams where this pipeline is proposed without threatening water quality and degrading aquatic habitat. DEC must therefore deny the 401 Water Quality Certificate.

Despite the inevitable violations to the state's water quality standards, we are hearing that a deal has been made to approve the project anyway. A two-mile reroute was recently proposed to FERC so that a wooded tract in Delaware County owned by the Kernan family could be avoided. The CEO of Cabot told investors on July 24 that approval of the reroute is the final detail before DEC grants the 401 Water Quality Certificate.

This would be a huge mistake. While we do not dispute the ecological value of the Kernan property, the reroute simply shifts a tiny portion of the proposed pipeline from one environmentally sensitive area to another, and actually increases impacts to upland forests. More importantly, the change does nothing to solve the myriad of problems affecting hundreds of other streams and wetlands along the proposed 124-mile pipeline corridor that deserve equal protection under the law. An application for a 401 Water Quality Certificate is supposed to trigger a comprehensive analysis, not a face-saving deal. The idea that such a minor change could lead to certification raises serious legal and political questions.

Governor Cuomo and Acting Commissioner Gerstman, please do not let the rubber stamp of a federal agency and pressure by the fossil-fuel industry destroy our state's most precious natural resources. You not only have the authority, but a legal obligation, to protect the water quality and safety of New Yorkers. It is impossible for the DEC to certify that this proposed pipeline complies with New York State's stringent water quality standards. We therefore urge you to do the right thing by denying the 401 Water Quality Certificate.

Sincerely,

Stop The Pipeline (STP)
